BROADWAY THEATER.

Completeness of Sousa's Concerts.

John Philip Sousa has a palatable way, all his own, of appearing occasionally in a most informal and hearty way and offering one or moer of his clever popular concerts to a public that seems at all times to be waiting for them. It must be granted that the famous conductor fairly deserves his good fortune in winning the public's favor, for he began long ago with odds against him, and fought his way into prime favor by force of direct purpose, unfaltering fidelity and genuine merit. unfaltering fidelity and genuine merit. He offered a good article for entertain-ment and never adulterated its quality, ment and never adulterated its quality, the public liked the brand and adopted it, and very soon a Sousa band concert became as salable an article as the amusement market afforded, and was snapped up whenever offered. Sousa is now on a prolonged transcontinental tour, his ninth, and the entire hand and eminent soloists will be here on Thursday, Dec. 16th, at the Broadway theater.

BREED THEATER.

The Fisherman's Bride, Thrilling Ftature Picture.

The customary large number of spectators was present at the Breed theater last evening, and they were shown an exceptionally fine series of light grade motion pictures. The feature picture of the first part of the week is entitled The Fisherman's Bride, and is a most complete and interesting picture. The pretty little fisher girl, being much admired by local fishermen, bestows her love upon one modest fisherman from across the bay, much against her stern father's wishes, for he has selected a husband for her. She rebels and marries the man of her choles, going immediately to his home. The dismayed suitors seek for revenge, and entrap the young groom upon the wharves and carry him far out to sea, but having witnessed the affair from a distance, the bride hurries to the police tug and tells her story, and they put a hot chase after the cuiprits, the police chasing in one of the speedy pilot boats, capturing the entire gang of villians, and returning the missing groom to the surrowing wife, and bringing the would-be abductors to justice. Splendid Biograph features are included on the list, and the very unusual story revealed in this feature has a strong moral, making it of absorbing interest and great beauty, the has a strong moral, making it of ab-sorbing interest and great beauty, the ball room scene being especially hand-

GYPSY MOTH

Discovered in Wallingford-Detected by Former Resident of Bay State.

The gypsy moth, one of the most dread of parasites and the existence of which has cost the country many thousands of dollars, is well installed in the borough of Wallingford, and only that a former resident of Masazchusetts, who had experience with the moth, discovered some on Meadow street last week and notified Warden Beeroft, the moth might have passed the winter unobserved and hatched out next spring by the millions. When the warden heard the report that the moth had been seen in the shape of cocoon he determined to investigate and Sunday morning started out and and Sunday morning started out and made a thorough search through the lower section of the borough in the vicinity of Meadow street. His search led him to North Colony street and there many trees were found to be carrying the clusters of eggs that would play havoe if left until spring. But this was not all, Through the entire length of Colony street as far as searched the cocoons were found. Meadow street trees were covered, and in front of the warden's own residence on North Whittlesey avenue the same conditions were discovered.—Meriden Record.

GAME WARDEN DECEIVED.

Trap for Calves Got David H. Clark of New Haven All Excited.

A story involving Game Warden David H. Clark is going the rounds, and is causing much mirth among a certain element of sportsmen who experience a feeling of satisfaction any time a bit of trouble befalls the minions of the law, according to the New Haven Palladium.

Haven Paliadium.

It seems that a short time before the game season closed a bold hunter while dashing through the woods near Doolitile's peach orchard at Mt. Carmel happened to stumble across a contrivance which he immediately assummel happened to stumble across a contrivance which he immediately assumed was a deer trap. Here was an open violation of the law, he though, so believing perhaps that he would put himself in right with the game warden by telling him of it he hastened to Mr. Clark and informed him of his find. The result was that Mr. Clark lost no time in arousing his deputies and with a small posse he scoured the woods near the supposed trap. For several days they kept an eye on the place in the hope of catching the owners of the trap, and there was much undo worry and work in the camp of Clark.

When at last the game rotectors had lost all patience and were about to give it up as a bad job one of the old settlers of the district happened by and quietly informed Mr. Clark that the traps were left by a certain Mr. Marks of North Haven and they were no less than five years old. Marks had some calves up in that section about that time. The animals went wild and when Mr. Marks wanted to move he found he would have dimently in inducing his calves to come along with him. He hit upon the plan of laying traps to catch them, and it was these traps that Game Warden Clark and Deputy Sheriff Uhl found which caused all the excitement.

BUILDING BOOM

Indicated by Arrival of Much Lumber at Bridgeport.

Six schooners, all lumber laden, arrived in Bridgeport Sunday afternoon within a few hours of each other, they bringing the largest amount of lumber into the city ever received on a single day, says The Telegram. Indeed, the total amount of lumber on these boats is more than has been received in the city during the past six months. One of these boats was eight weeks making the trip here, while others were only a comparatively short time, but all were caught in the recent storms and suffered thereby. There are 10 or 12 more boats expected here with lumber within the next few weeks or the first of the year so that Bridgeport will surely have on January 1 the largest supply of lumber in the city in its entire history.

These boats were consigned to dif-ferent lumber dealers and the local lugs were kept busy in getting them around to the different docks, the work keeping them busy until long after dark.

"Young man, do you think you can support my daughter in the way she has been accustomed?" "Before or since?" "Before or since what?" "Be-fore or since the panic."—Judge.

FOETRY.

THE PLUSH HAT.

There's lots of things I'd like to say about the women's fads today. About how they today are thin and on the morrow fac; But jujst when pungent phrase I form, just when my thoughts are getting warm. It happens that I look upon my new plush hat.

The foolish things that women do I really ought to roast, that's true; The way they try to get to vote is funny, as to that;
But just when I take up my pen to write about the sense of men My eyes will wander till they see my new plush hat.

I know that women always wear a pile of artificial hair
In switch and coil and dainty put and huge and monstrous rat.
But as I turn a paragraph designed to make the reader laugh
Upon the hook before me looms my now plush hat.

A fuzzy-wuzzy thing, indeed; devised to meet my cranial need.

But with the lac kef beauty of a dripping, half-drowned cat;

Before I think that I should try to pick the mote for slater's eye I meditate a moment on my new plush hat.

An olive green—a dainty green—a cuts
and cunning tint, I ween;
But whither are we drifting and what are we driving at?
I give it up in sore despair; I'll jest
no more of women's wear,
Since I have been induced to don a new plush hat.
—Chicago Evening Post.

My heaven was in her eyes.

And when they bent above me
I knew no deeper skies:
But when her heart forsook me
My spirit broke its bars.
For grief beyond the sunset
And love beyond the stars.

When that I loved a maiden
She seemed the world to me;
Now is my soul the universe,
My dreams—the sky and sea!
There is no heaven above me,
No glory binds or bars
My grief beyond the sunset,
My love beyond the stars.

When that I loved a maiden
I worshipped where she trod;
But when she clove my heart, the cleft
Set free the imprisoned god;
Then was I king of all the world.
My soul had burst its bars
For grief beyond the sunset
And love beyond the stars.
